WORK AUTHORIZATION

In the U.S., authorization required by international candidates varies based on the candidate's current visa status, the expected tenure of employment, and whether the candidate is a student or graduate. Likewise, responsibilities for requirements of each authorization type vary, with some authorizations requiring little to no additional work on the part of the employer. Categories and responsibilities for the most common authorizations are included here.

Employment While a Student

Prior to graduation, off-campus employment related to a student's major field of study is allowed with some restrictions. The type of authorization and restrictions depends on the student's visa type.

Employment After Graduation

After graduation, students may initially work in a position related to their field of study with the appropriate authorization.

Authorization Situation	Authorization Type	Initial Length	Possible Extension
Available to eligible F-1 visa holders	Optional Practical Training (OPT)	12 months	Additional 24 months for STEM fields (2 STEM extensions per lifetime)

SOME COMMON CULTURAL DIFFERENCES

Each country and culture brings its own set of social norms and behaviors. These cultural differences can become especially apparent during recruitment and work situations when people from various backgrounds may interact.

Category	Factors to Consider
Eye contact	The level and meaning of eye contact may differ, as some cultures see direct eye contact as signs of aggression rather than respect.
Gender roles and interactions	Expectations of each gender in the home country vs. new country may differ; certain genders may be expected to interact with the opposite gender in a certain way.
Gestures & Body language	Non-verbal communication, expressions, and personal space may have contrasting meanings.
Individualist and communitarianism conceptions of self and others	Some cultures may stress the importance of individualism while others emphasize the value of the community over the individual.
Language barriers	Many people come from non-English speaking countries, so they may be limited in various ways including vocabulary, grammar, written communication, etc.
Recognition	Some cultures may stress the importance of modesty in regards to behavior and work; others may champion personal achievement and recognition.
Time & Scheduling	Concept of time may have a different level of importance; cultures may be more or less strict about adhering to set schedules.
Uncertainty avoidance	Countries may have more or less levels of tolerating ambiguity in everyday life, workplace issues, and personal interactions.
Work relationships between authority figures and employees	Some countries may encourage or value healthy challenges to authority figures/supervisors; other countries, any kind of disagreement may be highly discouraged; daily interactions with supervisors may vary as well.
